

FROM THE EDITOR

I don't think it should take an awareness day, week or month to recognise the great work or the struggles others face.

But, it does seem that it sometimes takes one to open people's eyes to the unnoticed work of others.

For many organisations it's a vital way to fundraise or raise awareness about the support they offer.

Tomorrow marks the start of a new awareness day that's also being touted as a world first.

It's Thank Your Cleaner Day. A day that organisers, the Building Service Contractors of New Zealand, says is a world first.

The organisation, rightly, says cleaning is one of the most vital industries in the world, yet most people doing this work are invisible to others.

Why not take time to thank all those doing a great job in your community, rather than making time to grumble.
